

Labor Economics: Immigration and Education

Overview

This course offers a survey of labor economics that covers the basic theory of wage determination and human capital, together with a range of applied topics, from immigration and discrimination to safety regulation and the family.

Professor

Dr. Bryan Caplan

Professor of economics at George Mason University, Caplan is a sought-after media figure in the United States and blogger at the popular EconLog.

Dates

June 10th to July 4th

Schedule

Monday to Thursday: 4:30 p.m. to 6:00 p.m.

Total course hours

22.5 hours (15 sessions)

Maximum capacity

24

Price

329€

CERTIFICATE

Upon course completion, UFM Madrid will issue the student a certificate that confirms number of hours of class attendance as well as the grade earned by the student for the course.

UFM Madrid does not issue academic credits for summer courses to non-UFM Madrid students. It is the responsibility of such students to coordinate any credit recognition with their own institution. UFM Madrid is happy to provide a course syllabus and other collateral information to help the student facilitate this process.